

State schools in Scotland have a licence to photocopy materials, arranged through the local authority, with the Copyright Licencing Agency. The standard licence contains a section (see below), which is based on the Copyright and Visually Impaired Persons Act 2002, that states that a local authority (the Licensee) can adapt resources for a student (the Authorised Person) who is 'visually impaired'.

We believe that this means an employee of the local authority can legally make and supply an accessible copy of any book or other publication, for any other pupil who meets the definition below in the local authority (i.e. not just your own school), without having to ask permission from the publisher. If the pupil does not meet the definition below, you have to ask permission to adapt the book.

Note that you are not allowed to make an accessible copy of a book if one already exists commercially - you should buy the accessible version. You are therefore obliged to check first before making an accessible copy.

The definition of a "visually impaired person", in accordance with s.31F (9) of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 is a pupil:

- "(a) who is blind;
- (b) who has an impairment of visual function which cannot be improved, by the use of corrective lenses, to a level that would normally be acceptable for reading without a special level or kind of light;
- (c) who is unable, through physical disability, to hold or manipulate a book; or
- (d) who is unable, through physical disability, to focus or move his eyes to the extent that would normally be acceptable for reading."

In our opinion, (d) above would apply to many pupils with 'visual dyslexia': for example, those who perceive the text to flicker or move, who have difficulty scanning accurately along the text and moving from line to line, and as a result who experience headaches and eyestrain when reading for any length of time, because these visual problems are often due to difficulties in focussing or tracking.
